

Leading Women in Business - Raleigh

Dr. Darcy Dane with her CBC therapy dogs, Doc and Ollie

Photography by Joe Reale @ jareale.com

There's a reason patients from all across the world are asking Dr. Darcy Dane for help.

She's completely unconventional, and it's this freedom to step outside of the traditional realm of medicine that has made her so effective.

"Everything is one-on-one here, and we can dig deeper because we don't have the constrictions of traditional medicine," she says. "We treat the body as a whole. We look at the chemistry and the physical and neurological side of things, and then, we put it all together."

Self-described as someone who doesn't want to lose, Dr. Dane says patients often find their way to her after they've tried everything else and have been told there's no solution to their problem (or worse, that they don't have a problem at all). As a result, she's always looking at cases from multiple angles.

"They're at this point where their well-being hinges on my ability to synthesize a lot of information and then develop a very specific, highly individualized treatment protocol," she says. "Our focus is always on changing the life of just one person. If we can do that, then we know it also changes the dynamic of a family and of a community. One life is never just one life. It always has such a bigger impact."

